

LexiCLIL:
A Lexical Syllabus
for the Common European Framework for English

Preamble

Research into lexical patterning and frequency has grown apace in recent years, largely due to developments in computer software that have enabled the ready processing of extremely large banks of linguistic data. The insights that are emerging from this research have profound implications for content and language integrated learning. The Common English Lexical Framework (CEFL) is based on our research into how a principled and corpus-informed approach to vocabulary learning can be integrated into the CLIL framework. CELF is one piece of the puzzle to find answers to the perennial questions of what types of vocabulary CLIL practitioners should be teaching, in what order they should introduce it, and what kind of approaches to the teaching and learning of vocabulary might best lay the groundwork for success in the CLIL environment.

About the Common English Lexical Framework (CELF)

In designing The Common English Lexical Framework (CELF), the prime objective was to produce a lexical syllabus describing the words that a learner should be able to use productively according to their language proficiency as described by the Common European Framework for Languages (CEF).

In order to establish this broad framework, the following procedure was followed:

- i. The Rinsland (1945) corpus of 6 million words of students' written work collected across grades 1 to 8 was used as the basis to determine the productive range of lexis of children in the formative years of schooling in America. Although the corpus was dated, word frequencies do not change very much over time, and the corpus should have proved perfectly adequate to establish a basic if slightly crude framework for further analysis.
- ii. The words that emerged as keywords in the corpus were then further investigated and classified by comparing them with the frequency of use of words in other extant lists. These lists included:
 - a. 2,500 most common words spoken by children (Stemach & Williams),
 - b. the 3,000 most common words from grades 1 to 5 in America (Dale & Chall),
 - c. the 220 most common 'sight' words (Dolch sight words),
 - d. the 20,000 most commonly used words in British English (Kilgariff) and
 - e. the 2,709 most commonly used words in English in the Billuroğlu and Neufeld List (2007).

Investigation of word frequency in general, word frequency in specific age groups and at particular levels, and an examination of the CEF 'can-do' statements thus enabled a categorization of the resulting word families into the six discrete levels of the Common European Framework.

One distinguishing feature of the lists that emerged is that rather than banding given headwords and family members together, as most word frequency lists do, the new CELF list banded each word individually. Thus, although we started from the premise that words are listed according to word families (e.g. FACE is the 'headword' of a family made up of four words: face, faces, faced, facing), the individual words themselves need not appear in the same band. The word AGED, for example, need not necessarily have the same value as the word AGE.

The word family breakdown according to CEF levels is shown in the table and chart below. As implied earlier, the newly produced CELF can be the basis for a lexical syllabus that can be applied alongside a CLIL approach in keeping with the Common European Framework in terms of assessed language ability. In order to be functionally bilingual, students should probably be able to function at a B2 level in terms of the CEF skills descriptors and at the same time have a good productive knowledge of the most common meanings and uses of the words from the corresponding CELF lexical syllabus.

The CELF lexical syllabus does not suggest that these are the only words students need to know. Each student will also have their own individual lexicon consisting of words they have found useful in their own context, as well as the 'special' words in their subject areas.

	Headwords	Family Words

Common English Language Framework

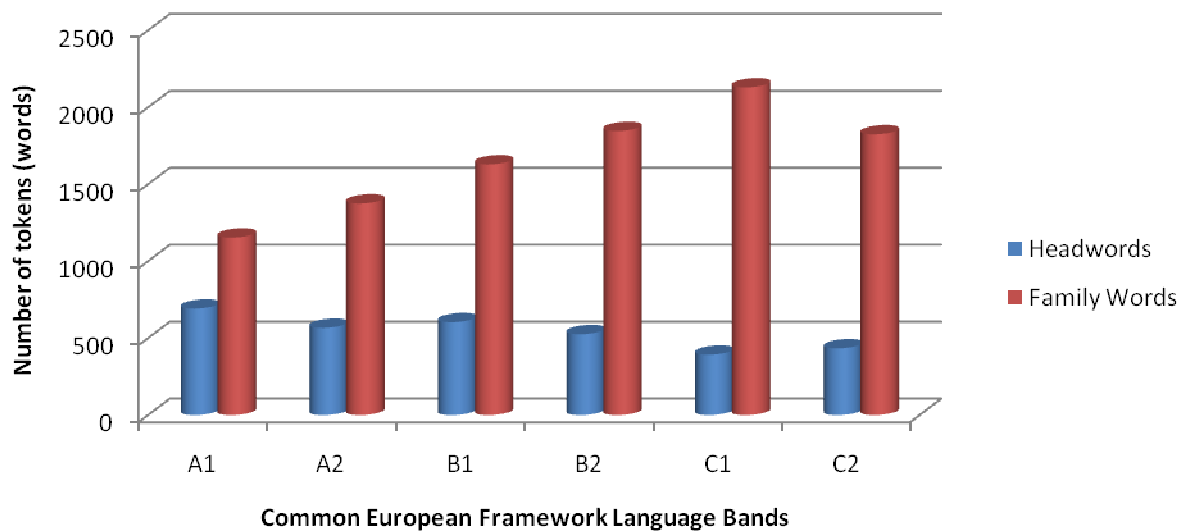

Figure 1: Headwords and family words that students should be able to use productively at CEF bands of language ability

Many of the words in the CELF are 'multi-purpose' words, and need to be explored in both depth and breadth. In particular, words that may appear to be general words may also have very specific meanings in the context of specific subjects. For example, 'SCALE' has distinct meanings, uses and collocations in Mathematics, Geography, Geology, Music, and Biology. Indeed on further analysis and investigation, it transpired that there are actually 3,605 words in the CELF that have specific meanings within the broad subject areas of study in primary and secondary school as categorized by the MacMillan School Dictionary (Rundell, 2004). Thus in the next stage of the project, the words in the CELF having already been divided into six levels were further tagged according to possible applications in content study. The key below indicates the range and extent of this operation:

Mus	Music
Edu	Education
Sci	Science
Phy	Physics
Lan	Language
Hea	Health
Mus	Music
Ana	Anatomy
Env	Environment
Soc	Social Science

Bio	Biology
Mat	Maths
Com	Computing
Agr	Agriculture
Che	Chemistry
Rel	Religion
Eco	Economics
Lit	Literature
Art	Art
Geo	Geography/Geology
Ast	Astronomy
Soc	SocialScience

Table 2: Key to subject areas for CLIL

The principled approach in the undertaking described above has thus generated a lexical syllabus that provides target vocabulary in English for each of the six levels in the Common European Framework, and provides guidelines for curricular sequencing and implementation. By further identifying general English words that have specific subject meanings, a further bank of support has been provided that will enable CLIL practitioners to explore the shifting nature of lexis across the curriculum as they work with these words. What remains is to consider how the learning of the words can best be facilitated in the CLIL environment.

How to use the lists

The lists are presented in seven columns, with words from each word family in one row.

1. The word family members that students should be able to use productively are given in six columns: A1, A2, B1, B2, C1, C2. In each CEF level, words are listed in blocks by common use according to BNL2709.
2. The levels are cumulative, i.e., as a student progresses up the CEF bands of proficiency, their productive use of words will include the words from all the previous levels.
3. Note that whenever possible, students should be expected to review and recycle words from previous levels in any given task.
4. The final column indicates whether the word is a high frequency word in a subject area, either by having a special meaning (e.g. VEIN has different meaning in Anatomy than it does in Geology), or by the 'company' it keeps in terms of collocation (e.g. BALANCE: BALANCE SHEET in Economy, but BEAM BALANCE in Physics and BALANCED EQUATION in Chemistry).

Sets of computer-based flashcards are available that students can use to help them learn the basic aspects of these words in a short period of time.

- The flashcard decks are viewed in the ANKI flashcard system, which uses a 'spaced repetition system' that presents words for review according to each student's need to review and recall.
- The decks can be obtained from Lexitronics.

In addition, you can copy any text that you want to use with students and create a 'coloured profile' of the text at <http://lexitutor.ca/vp/bnl>

- Just copy and paste your text in the input box, and press the SUBMIT button to show the common words in four different colours: blue (high frequency), green (frequent), yellow (common) and red – proper nouns or other words that are not common in general English.
